34th ADLUG Annual Meeting: 'The digital library in the spotlight: innovative solutions for library leaders'
American University of Rome. October 21-23, 2015

“GLAM is an acronym for "galleries, libraries, archives, and museums", although other versions of the acronym exist, such as LAM, which incorporates only libraries, archives, and museums. More generally, GLAMs are publicly funded, publicly accountable institutions collecting cultural heritage materials.

The term GLAM emerged as these institutions began to realize their roles and goals were converging, creating the need for a wider industry sector grouping. This became especially apparent as they placed their collections online—artworks, books, documents, and artifacts all effectively become equal 'information resources' when they are online.

As collecting institutions, GLAMs preserve and make accessible primary sources valuable for researchers.”
